Smith was born in 1927 in San Diego, California. He began his acting career in the early 1950s, appearing in such films as "The Caine Mutiny" and "The Ten Commandments." In 1957, he starred in the title role of the television series "The Life and Legend of Wyatt Earp." Smith's acting career was successful, but he was also struggling with addiction to alcohol and drugs.

In 1961, Smith had a life-changing experience. He was invited to a Billy Graham Crusade, and he accepted Jesus Christ as his Savior. Smith's life was transformed. He gave up his addiction to alcohol and drugs, and he began to share his faith with others.

In 1965, Smith founded Calvary Chapel Costa Mesa, a church that would eventually grow to become one of the largest churches in the United States. Smith's ministry was characterized by his emphasis on grace and forgiveness. He believed that everyone, no matter how far they had fallen, could be redeemed by the love of God.

Smith's ministry was not without its challenges. He was criticized by some for his unorthodox methods, and he was even sued by some of his former followers. However, Smith never wavered in his faith. He continued to preach the gospel of grace and forgiveness until his death in 2013.

In his book, The Final Act, Smith tells the story of his life with candor and humor. He shares his struggles with addiction, depression, and divorce, as well as his triumphs in his faith and ministry. The Final Act is a must-read for anyone interested in the life of this iconic figure.
